HISTORY HAS A TELL

They said Omaha was a city built on a bluff, and not just the kind you find on a map.

In the 1870s, when trains cut through the edge of town and saloons hummed with risk, a man named Canada Bill Jones made his fortune in persuasion. With a smile sharp as a card's edge, he could talk a banker or a farmhand into betting everything on a trick he had already won. It worked not because it was a game, but because it was an act of persuasion, played one mark at a time.

Years later, on this same stretch of Dodge Street, another kind of showman built the El Beudor Hotel. It promised something modern: a home with the convenience of a hotel, a place for travelers who liked their chances. Its marble floors and narrow halls echoed with ambition, reinvention, and a touch of mischief.

That spirit still lingers in these walls.

Inside Hotel Indigo Omaha Downtown, Three Card Monte is more than a restaurant. It is a tribute to those who bet on themselves, who smiled through the bluff, and who knew that the best stories always start with a little misdirection.

*Here's to the bluff and the bet, the confidence and the reveal.
A place where stories are dealt as smoothly as the pour,
and luck still favors those who play along.*
